WORDPRESS

This site is beginning to grow and grow, and forward compatibility has lately been in my mind more. Several days ago this site passed twenty thousand unique visitors, and more than seventy thousand hits, since late August. I recently converted everything (except the photolog) to XHTML 1.1, which was nice, but it's not the markup I'm worried about. My logging software hasn't been updated for months, and the main developer has disappeared, and I can only hope that he's okay.

What to do? Well, Textpattern looks like everything I could ever want, but it doesn't look like it's going to be licensed under something politically I could agree with. Fortunately, b2/cafelog is GPL, which means that I could use the existing codebase to create a fork, integrating all the cool stuff that Michel would be working on right now if only he was around. The work would never be lost, as if I fell off the face of the planet a year from now, whatever code I made would be free to the world, and if someone else wanted to pick it up they could. I've decided that this the course of action I'd like to go in, now all I need is a name. What should it do? Well, it would be nice to have the flexibility of MovableType, the parsing of TextPattern, the hackability of b2, and the ease of setup of Blogger. Someday, right?

Update, 2003-12-26: This became WordPress.

Matt,

If you're serious about forking b2 I would be interested in contributing. I'm sure there are one or two others in the community who would be too. Perhaps a post to the B2 forum, suggesting a fork would be a good starting point.

WordPress Now Available

Posted May 27, 2003 by Matt Mullenweg. Filed under Releases.

I am very happy to announce that the first release of WordPress is now available for download. A full change log is available, but here is a brief overview of the new features.

- Texturize — So good it'll make your quotes curl.
- WordPress Links — A link manager with everything you'd expect, from Weblogs.com support to a handy bookmarklet. Manage as many blogrolls as you like, and have complete control over their display.
- XHTML 1.1 — WordPress is complaint with XHTML standards up to 1.1, though by default it sends a 1.0 document type to avoid compatibility issues.
- Highly Intelligent Line Breaks — Occasionally called "nl2br on steroids," this brand new function adds line breaks except where there is already a block level tag or another line break.
- New Administration Interface — We've made it as simple as possible, and no more. Everything has been restructured from the ground up in a fully compliant XHTML/CSS interface.
- Manual Excerpts — This allows you to handcraft summaries of your posts to appear in your RSS feed and other places.
- New Default Templates — Again we've streamlined theses with the latest in simple, easy-to-understand standard XHTML and CSS. And not a CSS hack in sight.
- Plus numerous behind the scenes code cleanups, making this release faster and more stable than ever.

WordPress is available completely free of charge under the GPL license. Enjoy!

IT'S ABOUT TIME
05.13.2004

COMMITMENT TO A FREE VERSION, WHILE GETTING OUR PRICING RIGHT

As I hope you already know, today we launched the Movable Type 3.0 Developer Edition, what you may not know is that with this release we are also making major improvements in our licensing and support policies.

Over the past couple years, since our first release of Movable Type, we've tried to balance offering a product for free while being able to continue to innovate and develop. When our user base was in the hundreds and our users tended to be of the developer or designer breed and required less support, it was quite easy to release new versions at a fairly quick pace. As our user base grew and the tool became even more popular, it has become difficult to develop and offer support while relying on voluntarily donations.

That's not to say we aren't completely appreciative of those who donated. Every one of you has made it possible for Six Apart to exist today.

Ben and I are incredibly proud to see that Movable Type, the product that we first developed in our spare bedroom, has now enabled us to become a company that not only allows good people to have jobs that they (hopefully) enjoy but also a company that remembers those who got us here. Even better is that now we can say that so many of our staff were not only first and foremost Movable Type users but also people who volunteered for so long.

Before we were "Six Apart, the corporation" and were just "Ben and Mena," we were torn about our licensing structure. While we had no qualms about offering Movable Type for free, we knew that sooner or later our work was going to be exploited.

In preventing web hosts from offering Movable Type for a fee, we had to put a pretty strict blanket clause on our licenses to cover all cases when compensation was earned. Buying a commercial license to perform services was a bit backwards, but at the time, it was the only way we felt we could control the situation.

The problem with this was that it also stifled those who wanted to legitimately integrate Movable Type into their core service offerings. These were developers, designers and companies that loved Movable Type and felt that it was a good tool to provide to their clients.

With 3.0 we have revised our licenses and pricing structure to address this issue. We feel that with this new release we have created licensing that allows and encourages the development of software and services paid or free. We will be offering a variety of licensing options for small to large sized business, educational institutions and we are also beginning to sign-up qualified companies who are interested in hosting Movable Type (we'll be announcing a few partnerships very soon).

inDays are a celebrated tradition here at LinkedIn and a big part of our culture. Every month, LinkedIn gives one Friday back to all of its regular employees and interns. We use the day to innovate, collaborate, think creatively, work on inspirational projects and to invest in our career paths. This month's inDay theme is Mobile Madness. Being everywhere our members work, and mobile in particular, is key to our 2013 business strategy. Since mobile has become tightly woven into the fabric of our lives, having today's inDay devoted to mobile makes perfect sense.

Around the world, from our office in Amsterdam to our headquarters in Mountain View, employees spent the day attending mobile product sessions, exploring new mobile technologies, creating new features and hacking LinkedIn code.

Is Microsoft Turning the Corner in the Consumer Space?

Posted on February 21, 2013 by Paul Ballard

Journalists, industry pundits, and even your friendly neighborhood blog hacks love to predict the demise of a technology or company, if for no other reason than to prove that they really should have listened when we whined about their product decisions. But in a small twist of fate, Microsoft has taken a giant step forward in the consumer world. Oh no, not in terms of revenue or market share, I'm talking about something REALLY important. Winning Best Tablet and Best Smartphone of 2012 in Engadget's Readers Choice Awards.

The Nokia Lumia 920 has received numerous positive reviews with great build quality and probably the best camera of any phone on the market. While Windows Phone 8 may not have the sheer number of apps as some of the other ecosystems, this year has seen the number of available titles swell to over 125,000 with Spotify and Rhapsody being recent well received additions. These factors and perhaps more than a few clever product placements has helped the Lumia 920 earn SmartPhone of the Year.

The Best Tablet category is relatively new and has been dominated by the Apple iPad, but this year honors went to the Microsoft Surface RT. Its combination of excellent hardware design and the innovative Touch Cover seems to have been enough to get Engadget readers past the shortcomings of not being able to run Windows 8 applications.
